

Selected for the Phoenix.
MY BROTHER'S GRAVE.

Bright flowers are springing near thy simple stone,
That keeps its silent vigil o'er thy mould;
The dew drops here, in fresh-born beauty blown,
Do to the winds lift glowing cheeks and unfold;
Here, too, the sun-dew drops its head of gold,
In seeming sorrow for thy early doom;
And here the willow's long green locks unroll'd,
Wave mournfully above thy narrow tomb.
Shrouding thy resting place in a sepulchral gloom.

Not never more to thee shall summer bring
Her thousand joys of song, and sky, and bloom;
The wild-bird with young rooks wailing,
Shall hum unheeded o'er thy silent tomb.
No more shall thou inhale the sweet perfume
The zephyr bears away from vanished flowers;
No more the songs of birds shall chase the gloom,
That sometimes crossed thee in thy weary hours,
Thy ear is cold and deaf to all their sweetest powers.

For thou hast left the bright and lovely earth,
Left in the spring-time of thy manhood's years,
E'er we who loved thee knew one half thy worth,
Which now undim'd and beautiful appears.
But when thy doom drew nigh, with bitter tears
We watch'd beside thee, as the fever came,
Breathing its death-blast in the shivering ears,
And lay on thy brow its hand of flame,
Till thy brain shrivel'd, and thy heart lay still and tame.

And then we bore thee to thy narrow bed,
Our hearts bow'd down with more than common gloom;
Tears, heart-swell'd tears, were fast and frequent shed,
On every clod we piled upon thy tomb.

Not one stood by but mourn'd thy early doom,
And wept that death's foul blight should come to thee,
E'er yet thy flower of life had time to bloom;
The last and last upon thy grave, and mournfully
We turned and left thee prone beneath the cypress tree.

With faltering steps we sought again our home,
But all in how and lonely was the place!
For days and weeks strange thoughts would o'er us come;
We look'd to see thy fond familiar face,
Still looking as it did in other days,
Beside our hearth where thou wast wont to keep.
That spot our eyes unconsciously would trace,
But when the sad truth o'er our hearts would creep,

We could but look into each others face and weep.
Sleep on, dear brother! calm and sweetly sleep;
A few short days and I who mourn thee now,
Shall hear the plashing of broad Ocean's deep,
Surging its waves against the vessel's prow;
Soon her deep blue waters shall I plough,
Where lies my chosen home, and it may be,
I never at thy grave again may bow.

For e'er the last day of this year may flee,
I too may lie as low, as calm as thou,
Newfound.

For the Phoenix.

Thoughts suggested by the death of Rebecca P. Ranney, who died at Westminister West, April 8, 1844, aged 11 years.

"Death leaves a shining mark."
Again are we reminded of the truth of this remark. The victor, Death, has been among us, and taken from our number one young and dearly loved. Rebecca P. is indeed no more. She, who a few short weeks since was full of life and animation, whose active limbs sported so gaily with her young companions; who participated so eagerly in all the joys and sorrows of kind friends, now sleeps in the cold, dark grave. Her feeble pulse has ceased to beat. That kind, affectionate heart throbs no more. Those eyes that were wont to beam upon us so kindly, are closed forever. All is hushed in death. Nearly four weeks since, upon her feeble frame, and as we daily watched by her couch, hope and fear alternately prevailed, until disease had made such fearful inroads upon her constitution that we felt she must die. In that trying hour, as we gazed upon her pale and hollow cheeks, her sunken and half-closed eyes, and felt that the sands of life had well-nigh run, our selfish hearts still clung with tenacity to that loved form, and we would have said to the grim messenger, depart. But all our sympathies could not prolong her stay. "Obeying her Heavenly Father's call, her spirit took its flight to another, and we trust a better world. She has indeed gone to be with us on earth no more. No more will she mingle with us by our fireside, where she was ever a welcome guest. No more shall we see her in the Sabbath School, from which she was never absent, unless necessarily detained. She has gone, and all those places that recently knew her so well, shall know her no more forever. An only daughter, she was the pride and joy of fond parents. A tender and affectionate sister to brothers who deeply mourn her loss. Like the first sweet tender flower of Spring, nipped by the lingering frost, she has fallen, but to bloom in the Paradise of God.

"Too good for earth, perhaps,
And loved too well."
Westminister West, April 16.

IT A locooco print seriously urges as an objection against Mr. Clay, his uniform hostility to Gen. Jackson's administration! What a dreadful crime it must have been to condemn an administration notorious for extravagant expenditures, official defalcations, and illegal assumptions of power—an administration unparalleled for the financial embarrassment and ruin it spread throughout our land—an administration whose whole existence seemed devoted to believing the pledges it gave the people. How unparadise in Mr. Clay not to fall in at once with all the Old Hero's schemes and experiments, instead of denouncing and opposing them as (what they proved to be) pernicious and destructive to the country. This objection has about as much force as would a gentleman's refusing to trust some rascally swindler, instinctively knowing him to be such and all his specious pretences.

Captain Tyler is determined to have a hand in the Presidential game, whether he has backers or not. For this purpose, Tyler meetings have been held in Boston, New York, Baltimore, St. Louis, and Chicago, to appoint delegates to the "Administration Convention" to be held at Baltimore on the 27th inst. These assemblies were almost wholly composed of office holders and office seekers, and at none of them was there more than enough present to act as officers and committee. Really, if John Tyler expects a re-election, or even a single electoral vote, he cherishes a delusion more absurd than Millerism.

"DEMOCRATIC VICTORIES."—It is amusing to see what pains the locoocos take to pick a few crumbs of comfort out of the Spring election returns. They grasp at a victory in some small city or town, with as much eagerness as a hungry boy seizes a plum. State and Congressional elections are not to be compared with their petty triumphs; indeed, while the Whigs are surfeited with substantial and important victories, their opponents are glad to get even now and then a hard crust. A case in point is the late charter election at Milwaukee, W. T. The locoocos carried the city by 100 majority—about the same as usual; and forthwith their papers proclaim it as a "glorious and unparalleled triumph!" Maryland, Connecticut, Virginia, and a host of important towns and cities, all sink into insignificance in their estimation, beside Milwaukee—which has no voice at all in the Presidential contest.

A Washington letter in the N. Y. Republic says: "General Scott is away on a tour of inspection, and since his departure, his daughter has taken the white veil at the Convent in Georgetown."

Here we come.

The Morgan Tiger.
THIS celebrated Morgan Tiger was sired by the Morgan Champion, of Lancaster, N. H., and is eight years old this spring, and weighs between 11 and 1200 lbs. His color is a beautiful light dappled chestnut. The breed of Morgan horses are too well known to go into a long detail by way of pedigree, which is wholly unnecessary. This horse will be found this season at the following places, viz:

At Ezra Purple's in Gill, Mass., on Mondays; at Col. Paul Chase's in Greenfield, on Tuesdays; at Mr. Parker's in Montague, on Wednesdays; at J. Hunt Blake's in Northfield, on Thursdays; at William Follett's in Winchester, N. H., on Fridays; the remainder of the week at the stable of the subscriber in Hinsdale.

The Morgan Tiger will commence his visits May 18th, and continue them regularly thro' the season. For particulars see bills.

ARNES ELMORE.
Hinsdale, N. H., April 26, 1844.
